

SHE SAID SHE COULD ACT AND SHE DID

Los Angeles, Cal.—Determination, the age-old key to Pandora's box of worldly riches, is Marjorie Daw's good luck talisman.

Marjorie was going to school in Hollywood. Suddenly the girl dreams crystallized into definite shape.

"I want to be an actress," she thought.

One afternoon, when her parents thought her at play with another little girl in the neighborhood, Marjorie betook herself to Universal City and applied for a job.

There was that certain something behind her clear blue eyes which never was known to spell "failure." And they hired her, although there was a long waiting list of experienced players.

Now she is a member of the Lasky stock company, one of the best positions a film player can hope to secure in moviedom.
